

Top Tips

A good participation strategy:

- Is developed by a wide range of stakeholders working in co-production, including children and young people.
- Puts children and young people's voices at the centre.
- Is a working document.
- Is clear about which demographics the strategy applies to (universal or specific).
- Identifies individuals, structures and processes in place for participation.
 - Including the individual or job role accountable for participation.
- Summarises:
 - the current context (good practice and challenges)
 - aspirations
 - steps to achieve these
- Outlines how participation will be monitored and evaluated.
- Clarifies how the strategy will be shared with stakeholders.
